Section 5: ReadingRead the article. Then match each statement with a phrase from the box.*Watching sports

Many people love going to a game, right? Well, watching sports can be good for you, but it can be bad for you, too. Here's how:

Watching a game makes you feel good or bad

When you watch sports, your brain makes you feel like you are playing the sport, too. And then, when your team wins, you feel like you win, too. When your favorite sports team is winning, you feel good because your brain produces a chemical called dopamine. Dopamine makes us feel good. The same thing is true if your team loses. You feel bad because your brain produces a different chemical. It is called cortisol. Our bodies produce it when we feel stress.

Your heart beats faster when you exercise.

Watching a game can be good or bad for your health

Watching a game can make your heart beat faster. That's what happens when you exercise, too. People who watch games at stadiums have a faster heart rate than people who watch them on TV. So, buy a ticket and go to a game! But be careful. If you have heart problems, watching sports can be dangerous. Your heart can beat too fast.

Watching a game can help you make friends

Sports fans talk about sports with other sports fans. They make new friends at games. Talking to friends makes you feel good. Sports fans make friends all over the world. They talk about games on social media with other sports fans in different countries. They follow the same teams together. In international sports events like the Olympics, people from the same country feel like they are all friends. They want their country to do well.
