Section 5: Reading Part ARead the article. Then choose the correct answer to the question.*Going shopping abroad?

Everyone loves shopping for clothes, right? And the most exciting place to go shopping is in another country! But before you get your cash and credit cards ready, there may be a few things to think about.

To begin with, there can be very different attitudes about how to dress in other countries. In some liberal countries, it's normal for people to dress in ways that make them look different. Often, in these places, people wear clothes that make them look unique—they don't want to look the same as everyone else. In some conservative countries, a person who wears very different clothes from others may make people feel uncomfortable. Also, in these conservative countries, people usually avoid showing too much skin in public, even on the warmest days. They don't wear sleeveless or short-sleeved shirts. Be careful! In some conservative countries, you can buy clothes that aren't appropriate to wear. Be sure to think about this when you buy clothes.

There can be cultural differences in the stores where you buy the clothes, too. For example, in the department stores of some countries, customers want help when they are shopping for clothes. There are many salespeople in these stores waiting to help. They talk to you while you shop and give advice even if you don't ask for it. This can make people from other cultures feel uneasy. They don't like it and they feel uncomfortable. In their countries, it's usual for them to spend time looking at clothes alone. They don't want people to follow them around and give advice or help. If they need help, they will ask for it.

In certain countries, haggling is a big part of shopping. Customers think about the best price for the item that they want to buy and suggest that price to the salesperson. The customer and the salesperson talk about this until they agree on the final price. This is normal in many countries. Be sure to find out the rules. It is also inappropriate to haggle in many countries.

So, before you buy your ticket for a shopping trip in a different country, make sure you read about the shopping culture first.

30. Which statement expresses the writer's main idea?
- a. Shopping abroad can be very difficult.
 - b. Shopping for clothes can be different abroad.
 - c. It's a good idea to go shopping in groups.
