WRITING HANDBOOK*PAGE 83, EX. 1

Students should indent the introductory paragraph, the paragraph about Morocco, and the paragraph about Tahiti, as follows:

Bargaining customs are very different around the world. Few would go shopping in another country without knowing the exchange rate. However, many travelers don't learn anything about the local shopping customs of the place they are visiting before spending money. Understanding when it's OK to bargain can save you a lot of money and make your shopping experience much more enjoyable.

In Morocco, bargaining is always expected in the shopping markets. Here bargaining is more than just getting the best price. If you go into a shop and agree to the first price a seller offers, the seller may not be happy. For Moroccans, bargaining is a form of entertainment; it's a game of skill, a little bit of acting, and it's a chance to chat about the weather, business, and family. So be sure to have fun and try to get a better price!

In the food markets in Tahiti, bargaining is not appropriate. In fact, it is considered disrespectful to ask for a better price. In these South Pacific food markets, sellers will even take their fruits and vegetables back home with them, rather than give a discount!
